Description

This is the first in a series of drills that can be used as great warm up drills. Timing and passing accuracy are critical or else the drill will fall apart fast. Tell players that they need to make eye contact with the first player in the line across from them before they both go (this will also help players think about communicating). This drill typically falls apart fast the first time a team attempts it, however, if this series of drills is used on a consistent basis it can be a great series of drills to use throughout the year. There are more great variations of these drills that require players to think, so getting players used to the formation and timing will allow you to move on to more of the advanced variations.
