MERRIMACK DECEPTION RETRIEVAL DRILL

Time: Station:

This is a great drill for defenseman to work on their deception and puck protection when retrieving a puck from the corner with passive forechecker pressure, so they are able to get used to being quick and decisive.

SETUP:

- This drill is super easy to set up, one line at the tops of the circles and there only needs to be one puck in the possession of the second player in line to start the drill.
- This can be run on both circles at the same time.

HOW IT WORKS:

- To begin the drill, the second player in line will chip a puck into the corner and the first player in line will go to retrieve the puck. After the second player chips in the puck, they will apply passive pressure on the player retrieving the puck.
- After the player does a quick deceptive move in the corner by pointing their toes one way and escaping the other, they will protect the puck from the passive pressure and pass the puck to the next player in line.
- This is a flow drill so after that pass is made, the player then dumps the puck in and applies passive pressure to the previous forechecker as they retrieve the puck, and it continues on.

COACHING POINTS:

- This drill is primarily for defenseman to work on their feet deception in the corner as well as protecting the puck from possible pressure.
- Since this drill is very simple, the deception is the main idea of the drill and should be executed well.

This drill provided by Ryan Durocher from Merrimack College.