OSWEGO DOUBLE RETRIEVAL DRILL

Time: Station:

From Oswego State Assistant Coach Bob Shattell. This is a great drill for players to work on getting to the puck quick on retrievals, using deception and shoulder checking.

SETUP:

- This is a half ice drill so the goalie can be in the net in its usual spot.
- There can be a line of players at the hashmarks on the wall on only one of the circles- this drill cannot be run out of both sides at the same time.
- There should be a coach inside the circle with pucks and one player at the blue line with the far post ready for a pass.

HOW THE DRILL WORKS:

- To start the drill, the player going will skate around the top of the circle and transition backwards. As they do this, the coach will dump a puck into the corner. After they hit the bottom of the circle, they will transition back to forwards, fake left with their toes and go right to retrieve the puck.
- After retrieving the puck, they will pass back to the coach. They will then go skate around the coach from the inside out and while they are doing this the coach is dumping another puck.
- This time, instead of escaping with the puck, the player will hold onto the puck and take it around the net, when they are behind the net, they will do sort of a half mohawk to face their line and then turn back to forwards. They will pass up to the player on the blue line.
- The player on the blue line will shoot and the player that made the pass will take the goalie's eyes away and look for the tip/redirect.
- After they tip the drill is over, the player that just went will go take the spot on the blue line to create an easy rotation.

COACHING TIPS:

- Because the players are working on their retrievals in this drill, it is important they pay attention to the deception with their toes, faking one way and going the other. As well as shoulder checking before, they retrieve any puck.
